THE TRUTH ABOUT GREECE

American Mission to Greeks, of Ridgefield, New Jersey, the largest interdenominational faith missionary and relief organization working among the Greeks, wishes to inform the public of the following facts regarding its work:

NEWSPAPER AND MAGAZINE EVANGELISM:

The full-length Gospel messages written by its President, Spiros Zodhiates, are published in Greek newspapers and magazines in Greece and around the world as advertisements. These messages have continued for the past nine years with only a partial interruption of three months, caused by a confused situation at the beginning of the present National Government in Greece. They are now being published regularly with the express permission of the Greek government.

Because of the unprecedented spiritual impact upon a whole nation through the publication of Gospel messages in the Greek press, American Mission to Greeks is endeavoring to extend this project to other countries. Thus, as of October 30, 1967, we began placing Gospel messages in two Arab magazines (Ashabaka and Assayad) and one Arab newspaper (Al Anwar), published in Beirut, Lebanon, and reaching into the Moslem world. The messages are written in Arabic and appear in these publications weekly as advertisements. As God provides the means, AMG intends to extend this to the whole Arab world and many other countries.

We also desire to place regular messages in national magazines in the U.S., such as TIME, NEWSWEEK, and LIFE (did you see “A Matter of Life or Death,” AMG-Berean Gospel Distributors’ advertisement on page 66 of the October 20, 1967, issue?). This will expose millions of people to the Gospel who are not being reached in any other way. We challenge you to join us in this effort, thus making AMG stand also for “Advertising the Message of the Gospel.”

SCRIPTURES AND EVANGELICAL LITERATURE

Our publication and distribution of Scriptures, Evangelical magazines, books, and tracts continue uninterrupted in Greece. We are the leading publishers and distributors of such literature, through our own large printshop in Athens, our bookstores, and porteurs covering the entire nation of Greece.

The printing and distribution of our Evangelical tracts has never been banned, nor has there ever been any interference with the mailing of such literature, either in the country itself or to outside countries.

At the beginning of the present regime, the censors insisted that, in addition to the designation “Of Evangelical Principles,” our literature should bear the word “Protestant.” When it was explained to the top Government leaders that this word was offensive to Greek Evangelicals, who have always been known simply as Evangelicals, the Ministry of Press reinstated the legal provision that has existed since 1936, that distinctively Evangelical publications should bear the words, “Of Evangelical Principles.”

As of June 25, 1967, American Mission to Greeks began a daily Greek Gospel broadcast over Trans-world Radio in Monte Carlo, Monaco, reaching into all of Europe, the British Isles, and Greece. This is the first time in history that Greek Gospel broadcasting on a daily basis is reaching the entire land of Greece. We are free to advertise this broadcast within Greece itself.

RELIEF TO THE NEEDY

In addition to its spiritual ministry, AMG supports children in seventeen orphanages in Greece, sends 150-200 tons of food, clothing and drugs annually, and gives financial support to hundreds of families throughout Greece. This program is registered with the U.S. Government’s Agency for International Development, and enjoys customs-free privileges from the Greek Government. You or your church or Sunday school may support a Greek child for $15 a month. Full information gladly sent on request.

In addition to all this, AMG sponsors some 400 Gospel radio releases weekly in the U.S., both in English and Greek.

In order that you may challenge the unsaved and Christians in your own community, and arouse interest in your church, AMG offers you a service by which you can be provided with a six-inch Gospel message each week ready for insertion in your local newspaper. You can thus enter every home in your area every week. The newspaper is the most powerful means of communication in your community. We invite you to send for our free “Newspaper Evangelism” brochure, explaining details of this plan.

AMG also offers a service by which you can increase your knowledge of the New Testament by joining our Expositor’s Class (no obligation, no cost) to receive a free Bible-study booklet every five weeks, in which Mr. Zodhiates expounds the Scriptures from the Greek text, in English. Just fill out the coupon below to receive the current booklet free, CHRIST AND THE VIRGIN MARY.

We invite you to join Mr. Zodhiates on a tour to the Holy Land and Greece that will be an unforgettable experience—April 3-24, twenty-two days, at the all-inclusive price of $977.00. You’ll retrace the steps of the Apostle Paul and spend Easter in Jerusalem. Ask for tour folder.

More on ‘Who Killed the Congress?’

Sir: Regarding the postponement of the Third Evangelical Conference for Latin America, I am being blamed for the postponement, but this is not correct. What happened was as follows:

I was sent to Sao Paulo by this Council (National Evangelical Council of Peru) in March to take part in the meeting of the Organizing Committee and given the charge to check whether the attitude of this Council and insist that the Conference be evangelical in nature rather than social and revolutionary. Particularly this Council is opposed to the activities of groups such as Movimiento Estudiantil Cristiano, Union de Juventudes, Evangelicas Latino Americana, and the Comision Provisoria Pro Unidad Evangelica Latino Americana, on account of their Marxist leadership and their infiltration of the evangelical movement in this Continent with communist teaching. I went with fear and trembling, thinking that I was going to be kicked out. However, I went to Brazil a little ahead of time and used three days to good advantage looking up evangelical elements and persuading them to take part in the meeting, in spite of the previous decision not to do so. When the showdown came, I found that I was surprisingly well backed. I was decided to make the subject of the Conference the Great Commission, in the light of Romans 1:15-16. I presented the message of Berlin and this was made the basis of the Convocatoria, which was drawn up in thoroughly evangelical terms. I was aware that they did not like the December date but the Council was not informed because no official communication had been received by anyone on the subject.

On the eve of September 25, the Chilean delegate informed us that word had been received in Chile to the effect that the III CELA had been cancelled. While in Chile in October, I saw a letter written and signed by Emilio Castro postponing the III CELA until February of 1969 despite all his disclaimers about organizing the Conference. It was he who made it impossible for Coelho Ferraz to meet with us in Lima and it was also he who called off the Conference for January of 1968.

This Council was cognizant of persistent rumors to the effect that Emilio Castro had said that he would make sure that the III CELA was postponed until Herbert Money was out of South America. It looks as if he has done this but I sincerely hope that in the meantime the evangelical position may be so strengthened that he will not be in a position to carry out his plans.

Dr. Herbert Money, General Secretary National Evangelical Council of Peru

An Impossible Dream?

Sir: I want to comment on the article, “Who Killed the Congress?” by C. Peter Wagner.

Of course, I do not think it is necessary to answer the journalistic question that Wagner uses as a title. He knows and I know who did try to kill that Congress. Happily this strange factor in the Christian reality of Latin America has been removed. But I do not go further in this direction because it is peripheral to the main dialogue and discussion going on in Latin America.

Three comments I would like to add in reaction to this article:

1. What are the purposes of UNELAM, Provisional Commission for Evangelical Unity? My friend, Peter Wagner, takes for granted that this is an instrument of the WCC and himself who convoked the consultations and sent out the invitations. It appears now that Emilio Castro and UNELAM did not want such consultations to take place and it is now known for certain that on the last occasion (September 25th) Emilio Castro and UNELAM refused to make any money available for the journey of Don Jose in spite of the fact that all his travel arrangements had been made and delegates from Colombia, Ecuador and Chile were waiting for him here in Lima.

Chile requested the postponement of the date of the Conference until early in January but this date was suggested by them and accepted by the Brazilians without consultation with our Council. I was aware that they did not like the December date but the Council was not informed because no official communication had been received by anyone on the subject.

2. Peter Wagner raises the question Who will control the Third All-Latin American Evangelical Conference? An answer is that will embrace the majority of evangelical churches in Latin America? I think that here again the newspaper technique betrayed my friend Peter Wagner. We are not talking about a competence or a race but we are talking about the Church of Jesus Christ and we are working and expecting in fear and anticipation, the movement of the freedom of the Holy Spirit. We are not looking for control of any encounter between Christians because that would be sin against the Holy Spirit. We are only interested in the meeting as such without any exclusion. We do believe that looking together at the Latin America reality, coming from the Bible, will show that we are not so separated as many people pretend we are. We are not trying to control anything, we want to serve in anticipation of the Lord’s orders of reconciliation that the Spirit of God is able to produce in Latin America. We expect that Christians with different points of view and different theological perspectives will come together to the Assembly in Sao Paulo in order to face together the question of how to be faithful in our context. We have the assurance that looking at reality as it is and reading our Bible in obedience we will discover how many things we have in common.

3. I would like to call attention to the word “Provisional” in the title of the Council. That is not an empty word, as Wagner assumes it, it means that we are just an organization to serve the aims of mission and Christian unity in Latin America, but that we are able to disappear at any moment. We exist only in working for something better, more inclusive and more faithful. We are not looking for our institutional growth, we are not a propagating ourselves, what we are looking for is the renewal of the Church in its fidelity to its Lord in Latin America. We are not expecting that the meeting in San Pablo will produce a rally of all evangelical people around UNELAM. The organizational question is quite a separate question of the encounter of the meeting face to face, to come to know each other in order to be able to trust each other. Our tragedy in Latin America is that we are separated geographically, because we are divided in over 150 different denominations, and because of tensions and fears that come from outside Latin America we are unable not only to dialogue one with the other but also to listen to one another. And this is what we are looking for in the next Assembly. A place, a chance to meet and gather with our aims fixed on what the Lord wants to do and is doing in Latin America, in the expectation that the Holy Spirit will show a way from there on.

I hope these comments will help to illuminate your readers in the problems we are facing in Latin America.

Would today’s impatient college student give up a vacation to listen to a series of lectures for which he would get no credit? Would you believe lectures on the Bible and missions? No, you say? Wrong.

For just such an event some 8700 students, plus 445 missionaries who acted as counselors and resource personnel, gathered on the campus of the University of Illinois at Urbana during the Christmas-New Year vacation. This Eighth Inter-Varsity Missionary Conference, now a traditional triennial event, drew students from all 50 states, from every province of Canada and from 57 other countries abroad.

Snow was falling as the collegians began filing through the turnstiles into the huge assembly hall on the Urbana campus. Some were worn out from a two-day train trip from the west coast. Others had come by chartered planes and buses and many hundreds by car. Then they had patiently gone through the long registration lines at the armory and lugged their baggage to assigned rooms in the dorms.

Entering the assembly hall the students saw a mammoth circular amphitheatre with a beautifully structured roof. At the center was the stage, draped in rich blue with a backdrop made up of the flags of more than 70 countries of the world. To the embarrassment of the arrangements committee, one speaker pointed out that the only flag with writing on it was a Muslim flag stating in Arabic that “there is but one God, Allah, and Muhammad is his prophet.”

Underneath, and much more clearly visible, was the theme of the conference in English: God's men — from all nations to all nations.

WHERE MISSIONS (NO LESS) TURNED THEM ON

Under the theme 'God's Man...'

Eric Pike, convention chairman.
The Rev. Eric S. Fife, director of the conference, opened with a declaration that the purpose of this mission-centered gathering was "not to press as many students as possible into foreign service." Rather, the objective was to establish such a meaningful relationship to Jesus Christ that the natural result would be increased involvement in Christian service.

During that first evening the packed stands of students heard that they live in a world of tumbling ideals. In fact, the world faces the threat of the loss of "all ideals," said C. Stacey Woods, general secretary of the International Fellowship of Evangelical Students. And the Christian world is in jeopardy of losing its biblical ideals. Woods outlined as one force countering this trend the work of some 35 national fellowships of university students now located in as many countries overseas.

In the keynote address David Adeney of Hong Kong laid emphasis on the rise of "student powers" throughout the world and called for "action led by God." Taking early Christianity as the model, Adeney called on students to move out and show the world that Christianity is something dynamic, just as it was in the first century.

Throughout the conference the students were exposed to a constant flow of Bible expositions, missionary appeals and panel discussions of the principles and problems involved in today's mission to the world.

The program was almost totally devoid of razzle-dazzle. The only audio-visual device in evidence was the public address system. Music consisted mainly of audience-participation singing from the Inter-Varsity hymnbook, composed mostly of great traditional hymns of the church. Other music included folk songs by John Guest of Liverpool, England, along with his American partner, Chuck Hess. Although their music was in a more contemporary vein it was completely reverent.

The speakers and panel participants were almost without exception from a generation beyond the students—a fact which brought more than one speaker to make mention of the "generation gap." In later conference sessions young people were being brought onto the platform to fill minor assignments, such as Scripture reading. Significantly, the youngest of the major speakers, George Verwer, 29, of Wycoff, New Jersey, coordinator of Operation Mobilization, was the one with whom the students identified most closely. After each meeting he was mobbed by young people who wanted his guidance on all sorts of personal, spiritual and vocational matters.

But in spite of the age of most of the speakers and in spite of the plainness of the program and its general lack of dramatic color, the mood throughout the entire conference was one of attentiveness. The students could hardly have been more absorbed in what was going on if the program committee had scheduled a

Seriousness of students surprises many

The seriousness of the students amazed many of the missionary pro's and even some of the pastors who were present. "In the image of all you hear about today's students, the kind of thing that gives them a black eye, this was a phenomenal assemblage," said Dr. John Alexander, general director of Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship in the U.S.

Throughout the entire five days of the conference students seemed to be carefully weighing words and ideas, testing one against another for validity and trying to discover the relationship and application to their own experience. This was in line with the statements of many students as to why they had come.

Some students, of course, were attracted by the travel experience, the chance to mingle with collegians from other parts of the nation and the world. Some saw it as a chance to meet students of the other sex with whom they might strike up a friendship. Then too, some were drawn by the fact that Urbana has become a tradition, an international event every three years which has become distinctive of Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship. Another factor was that many churches boosted the conference among their young people.

But by far the strongest motive in getting students to Urbana was the desire for information and guidance relating to their career decisions. Paul Eckles, a junior pre-med student at Texas State University, responded typically: "I came to Urbana to see what the Lord has for me, whether it is missionary work or not. I don't know what to expect. I just want to be open and waiting."

Some were sure they would be helped by the conference although they were not sure how. Early in the process Lynn Nelson of Westmont College in Santa Barbara, California said that "just the train trip" had done a lot for her spiritual life. Then she added, "I don't know what to expect. I just want to be open and waiting."

There were also some fairly new Christians who attended. "I just became a Christian about two months ago, and I want to find out what the Lord wants me to do," said Marge Heller, an English-journalism major Missouri University.

Devotional groups in the dormitories, both morning and evening, were another potent force in the conference. Discussion leaders had been put through a special training program in order to help the groups get the most out of their sessions together. The process was based on inductive Bible study, aiming at direct application of Scriptures to everyday life.

In at least one case, however, the discussion process ended too limited. A fellow remarked that he had tried to get some helpful discussion going on a verse that mentioned the Holy Spirit. "How do you know when the Holy Spirit is trying to push you around?" he had asked. But the discussion leader only coughed and ent on to the next verse, he added.

From the platform the students were being told that the day of the missionary is definitely not over. This as more than a consensus among the speakers. With some students singing "I'm still with it," the Christian college student declared. "I met a guy who really changed my life," one student from a Christian college remarked. He went on to explain that he was rooming next to a fellow from the hills of Tennessee who had shown him what a consistent Christian life was really like. They had been discussing the need to establish rapport in witnessing. Soon the Tennesseean was chewing the others out.

"If you don't have your friends taken care of by this time, you had better reexamine your Christian commitment," he told them.

"I was so mad I was about ready to pop him in the mouth," the other student said later. But by then another fellow exploded.

"No, don't you see that he's right," the third fellow said. Suddenly the light seemed to go on and the other students saw the validity of the Tennesseean's position. What's more, they soon saw that he had a life to back it up.

"I can hardly wait to get back and get going while I'm still with it," the Christian college student declared. In this feeling he undoubtedly had much company as the conference approached its climax in a watchnight communion service.

Some students faced missions more realistically than ever before. One student said he had come to the conference "gung ho" for missions, but he had slowed down to find out what it is really all about.

Some were concerned about leaving the conference without more follow-through. In fact, one missionary described it as something close to seduction to bring students to such a high point of commitment to God and to each other without establishing some sort of continuing community within which their commitment could be nurtured and developed. For the most part they would be without direct contact with any spirit of commitment such as they had experienced at Urbana, this missionary declared.

However, those who signed cards indicating a commitment to seek God's will in relation to service overseas would have the benefit of a follow-up plan. Eric Fife outlined a program to keep in touch with this group through correspondence and through IVCF staff contacts. "We will be in touch with them right through to graduation," he said.

Some of the results took place quite apart from the formal elements of the conference, mainly because the students had a significant ministry to each other.

QUALITY SERVICE
FROM A
LOW-OVERHEAD OPERATION

by Donald H. Gill

In a booklined study in Ridgefield Park, New Jersey centers the activities of the Interdenominational Foreign Mission Association. The person carrying the biggest part of the load is Edwin L. “Jack” Frizen. Surrounding him in his office are the biographies of many missionary notables, including William Carey, Adoniram Judson, Hudson Taylor and others.

Fewer staff, less overhead and more history than any other organization of its kind. Those are the leading characteristics of the Interdenominational Foreign Mission Association.

Although it would not exactly rate as a growth organization, that is not its objective. To a greater extent than is true of most other associations of missions, the IFMA is its membership. And it does not aspire to take over the functions of its member agencies.

But this does not mean that the IFMA cherishes organizational dwarfism. Rather, it has watched too many growing ecclesiastical entities become bureaucratically top-heavy, and it is determined to avoid the same pitfall. It would rather stay lean. And the same feeling runs through the mission agencies which constitute its membership.

The key to this position is not size alone. In fact, there is currently a merger movement all its own taking place within the structure of the IFMA membership. The Algiers Mission merged into North Africa Mission, the Alpine Mission into the Unevangelized Fields Mission, and both the Iran Interior Mission and the Oriental Boat Mission merged into International Missions. Each of these mergers took place with a view to reducing overhead and increasing organizational efficiency.

Thus the key is not size alone, but rather the ability to put Christian missionaries in the field and maintain them there. On this point the IFMA mission organizations have a common history. They are all so-called “faith” missions.

“This does not mean that we have any corner on the market in faith,” says Executive Secretary Jack Frizen.

The term “faith mission” grows out of the fact that missionaries are willing to undertake service overseas without the financial backing of any contractual salary commitments or other negotiable pledges of support. As a matter of general practice, however, they do usually postpone service abroad until informal commitments of financial assistance assure that they will not be in destitute circumstances on the field.

Another related factor, which characterizes most of the 44 IFMA mission agencies, is “personalized giving.” In other words, most of the $31 million given last year to IFMA missions went to the support of designated mission personnel serving overseas. In a technical sense the contributions go to the mission agencies, for purposes of administrative control and for tax reasons. But most of the contributions actually stem from interest in the work and outreach of individuals serving the missionary cause abroad.

In order to keep matters clear, the IFMA policy on relationship to fellowships and organizations which are clear within the conservative evangelical segment of the Protestant spectrum.

The IFMA policy on relationships spells this out. It declares that IFMA is a voluntary association of missionary organizations which have committed themselves to a testimony of fellowship and oneness in the body of Christ, “working together without organic union but in mutual interdependence.” It encourages cooperation with all other evangelical groups, and recognizes the possibility of differences in distinctive doctrinal emphases. It then adds that “theological inclusivism and apostasy in the present ecumenical movement make organizational association, cooperation, or fellowship with certain groups impossible.” However, it recognizes that even in this situation “communication may be necessary on a non-theological level.”

In practice, the most active lines of IFMA’s cooperation are with the Evangelical Foreign Missions Association. In order to keep matters clear, the IFMA passed a resolution authorizing its staff to “continue to cooperate with the EFMA in various joint efforts consistent with our aims and position and to fellowship in our common faith and problems, but, because of differing historical backgrounds, and constitutional frameworks, the two organizations retain their distinctive identities without thought or purpose of amalgamation.”

The history of IFMA goes back to
During the early years of this century, and even in the later part of the 19th century, several types of non-denominational activity had begun to spring up. Among these were Bible references, Bible institutes and independent mission organizations. Since these were nondenominational in character, they quite naturally began to reinforce each other. The conferences provided the appeal for missions, while Bible institutes provided training, and the newer independent mission agencies provided the administrative framework for sending missionaries to foreign fields.

Thus, on March 31, 1917, a group presenting four independent mission agencies gathered in a lecture room at the Philadelphia School of the Bible to consider an association. Out of that vision grew a formal organizational meeting held the following September in the prayer room of the First Presbyterian Church, Princeton, New Jersey. Here were seven missions in the original charter membership.

In the beginning the independent mission agencies were primarily a reaction to the “lack of imagination” on the part of denominational boards. Being interpreted, this often meant that newer independent agencies were concerned with the more remote, primitive areas on the mission fields. Thus the original members of the IFMA were such missions as the China Inland Mission, the Sudan Interior Mission, the Africa Inland Mission and others that were similarly concerned with reaching primitive tribespeople in the unreached continental interiors.

Another central concern later took the place of this emphasis on inland areas. The major denominations were becoming involved in the struggle with theological liberalism, and their mission agencies began to reflect this fact. Consequently there were some denominational churches which indicated a reference in their financial support of missionaries under the independent mission agencies. Meanwhile, newer denominations were also being formed and some of these threw their support to the IFMA boards.

As a result, the IFMA member agencies grew steadily from the 1920's through the 1940's. But it was not until 1951 that it opened a full-time office, which was first located in Manhattan. The first full-time executive secretary was the Rev. J. O. Percy and his assistant was Miss Cora Goble who has continued to serve the IFMA through the entire 17 years of its office's history. In 1960 the IFMA acquired property on the other side of the Hudson River and moved its offices to Ridgefield Park, New Jersey. Jack Frizen became executive secretary in 1963, after serving in the Philippines for two terms under the Far Eastern Gospel Crusade.

One of the key functions of the IFMA throughout the years has been, in effect, to accredit its member agencies, through the standards of its membership, as trustworthy missionary sending organizations. Existing alongside the IFMA boards are scores of other small independent mission organizations, some of which are decidedly questionable, if not clearly irresponsible. Thus the IFMA performs an important service in accrediting its member agencies to the supporting Christian public.

There is also a sense in which the IFMA membership includes a sort of doctrinal accreditation, since only those agencies which ascribe to its strictly evangelical confession of faith can hold membership. Because of the evangelical, fundamentalist character of the IFMA supporting public, this is an important part of the association's purpose.

Although there is central doctrinal agreement in the IFMA, this does not mean that the thinking is monolithic. The past annual meeting was held in one of the most strongly fundamental churches on the East Coast, but the host pastor was followed by a noted missions professor of the Disciples of Christ and his announced topic was "Contemporary Arguments Against the Missionary Society." Another topic on the program was "Structuring the Missionary Society to Fit Tomorrow's World."

The services of IFMA to its member boards and agencies include a wide range of activities. Some are carried at staff level while others involve the services of voluntary committees. The IFMA maintains committees on Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America, plus a special committee on the Muslim world.

The IFMA also sponsors the biennial Conference on Mission Administration, which serves both IFMA member boards and a range of other evangelical mission agencies. This has led to the publication of a Manual on Mission Administration.

Another joint effort with IFMA-EFMA backing is the publication of the Evangelical Missions Quarterly. This concept is now being enlarged to include a research function and an expanded news service, and would come under a jointly sponsored organization to be known as Evangelical Missions Information Service. The EMIS also contemplates a role in making the Christian public more aware of current developments in missions, with a view to increased involvement.

NIGERIA'S MIDDLE BELT EXPLODES WITH "NEW LIFE" by Donald Banks

Counseling converts after meeting in Lagos.

Fulani villagers of Northern Nigeria meet to hear the Good News in their language.

The Middle Belt is a non-defined, mostly pagan tri-stretching across the middle third of the country from east to west, bounded on the north by strong Hausa-Muslim territory and on the south by the huge Yoruba territory which have been exposed for many years to strong Catholic influences.
The Holy Spirit has swept the church in revival and we can never be the same again.”

So declares normally undemonstrative Wilf A. Bellamy, acting general secretary of New Life for All, the movement which has been used to transform the church in the Middle Belt area of Nigeria, West Africa, and earn for it the title of the fastest growing church in the world.

Half-empty churches now overflow

Churches which used to be half empty are filled every Sunday to overflowing. In areas where no churches existed believers now meet together for prayer and Bible reading.

Organizers of the movement have lost count of the thousands who have become Christians. By the end of the first year’s outreach recorded decisions numbered 15,000. But as believers fanned out into remote villages the movement spread like a forest fire.

Often the first that leaders knew a church had been established was when new believers trekked many miles through the bush and arrived at a New Life for All center asking for a pastor to be sent to their area to instruct them in their new faith.

Last year there was an influx of 120,500 new people attending Sunday worship in the TEKAS churches [a fellowship of churches which has sprung out of the work of the Sudan United Mission in Nigeria]. Accurate statistics are not available for other denominations, but they all report large increases and many hundreds of people being baptized.

Response snowballs

More than a thousand have been baptized in one part of Benue Province alone. A report from Kido says, “Every Sunday people are coming to Christ.” At Adamawa/Sardauna, in the north, 5472 prayer cells have been established.

What is the secret of the movement? “Our formula is simple and biblical,” says Bellamy. “Total mobilization equals total evangelization.”

In a way unknown before in Nigeria the various evangelical missions and denominations are working together, praying together and witnessing together. Anglicans, Baptists, Methodists, Pentecostals, United Missionary Society, Sudan Interior Mission and Sudan United Mission have submerged their differences and associated themselves with this united evangelistic effort.

One of Islam’s attractions has always been that she could pose as one vast monolithic whole while the Christians squabbled among themselves. But this has changed. The churches have returned to their primary responsibility of evangelism. Hearing all the churches preach the same message of salvation has made a considerable impact upon the people.
NIGERIA'S "NEW LIFE"

The opportune time

Admittedly, the people of Nigeria's Middle Belt were ripe to respond to the gospel. They were traditionally pagan and animist, and many were only superficially Muslim. The protective amulets and jujus of paganism had been retained while Mohammed and Allah were added to the local gods. Christianity often seemed to them a "white man's religion."

New Life for All involves all believers, not just the missionaries.

Pastor Yakubu Yako, a man greatly used by God in the movement, says, "Ever since missionaries first came to Nigeria many of us had the impression that the work of bringing Christ to the nation belonged to them. Pastors and evangelists and other leaders were simply their helpers. It never occurred to us that the responsibility of bringing Christ to men rested upon every believer."

Now all have become involved—men and women, young and old, even the children.

Many even give up their holidays and go out in apostolic fashion to remote areas spreading the message of new life in Christ. Some leave their farms to others and trek through thick bush to places where the gospel has never been preached before. Churches are springing up everywhere.

Facing opposition

Often they encounter opposition. At one village in Kano Province, a strongly Muslim area, the village leader decided to submit the visiting preachers to the greatest indignity possible. He offered them sleeping accommodations for the night—in the harlots' quarters! "When the people of the village hear this," he thought, "they will laugh the young men to scorn."

Later he heard noises coming from the quarters. He could see a small bush lantern flickering. He decided to investigate.

The young men had gathered the women together and that very night were holding a meeting and explaining the way of salvation.

In one village a woman pushed her way through the crowd toward the preacher. In her arms she held her small son suffering from a burning fever. Thrusting the unconscious child at the preacher, she cried, "If your God is so powerful and all you claim He is, let Him heal my child!"

The man was nonplussed. What should he do? He offered up a fervent prayer, and even as the crowd watched, the fever began to subside. The child stirred and the preacher handed him back to his mother. By morning the boy was completely better. Many people in that pagan village turned to Christ as a result.

Together 224 young men from just the evangelical churches of Plateau and Zaria Provinces have volunteered to give themselves for at least a month's gospel team outreach.

Nationals take leadership

Outstanding national leaders have been raised up. Pastor Yakubu is one. Hundreds have come to Christ through his ministry. The Rev. Moses Ariye, nicknamed the "Billy Graham of Nigeria," is another. A former Bible college lecturer, he has been released by the Evangelical Churches of West Africa to work full time with New Life for All. He travels ceaselessly, preaching, training, organizing and encouraging young converts.

Before direct evangelism begins in an area, instruction classes are set up in various churches. The New Life for All handbook is carefully studied. Scripture verses are memorized and an examination is set. In one year alone, 30,000 Nigerian believers attended these instruction classes to learn how to present the gospel message and lead people to Christ.

Prayer meetings are set up in innumerable homes. People begin to pray by name for unconverted neighbors. For many this is a totally new experience. They see God answering their prayers. They always knew that God answers prayer, but to see it happening is something different. When drunkards become converted, hardened pagans turn to Christ and witch doctors renounce their former ways and embrace Christianity, the impact upon the community is fantastic.

The real turning point

But to see Christians beginning to live truly Christian lives is the real turning point for many Muslims and pagans. They knew for years that the pastor had a juju hidden under his bed. When they see him publicly destroy it and show by his radiant life that Christ does give victory over evil spirits they are amazed. When they see Christians come with tears streaming down their faces bringing their gifts so that others can receive the gift of new life in Christ, their amazement knows no bounds.

At one meeting the people streamed forward with their gifts while the preacher was still preaching. One man took off his prized shoes and brought them. Another gave his wage packet still another his watch.

Similar incidents happen over and over again.

But opposition is mounting. Islam is not taking the matter lying down. Christians have been hauled before local courts on charges of causing disturbances. They have been fined and even sent to prison.

Muslims counter with 'New Life in Islam'

Muslim missionaries have begun to offer "New Life in Islam." In many areas expensive gifts are given to those who become converted to Islam.

In one place the converts to Islam were presented with 600 pieces of cloth and 185 rosaries. The late Premier of the North, Sir Ahmadu Bello, gave a check for $1000 each to the Emirs of Muri and Adamawa for promoting Islam in their areas. He also stated that Allah had promised "a luxurious house in heaven to whoever built a mosque for public use!"

Yet the outreach continues at every level of society. The powerful gospel broadcasting station in Liberia, ELWA, regularly beams a New Life for All program. Government radio stations in Nigeria have opened their facilities to gospel programs. School children are reached through special missions designed for them. Every secondary school in Lagos, the capital of Nigeria, was contacted by a New Life for All representative. Hundreds of students made professions of conversion.

Where will it all end? Nobody knows. The impact has reached far beyond Nigeria's Middle Belt. Gospel teams have found their way into every province of the solidly Muslim North. The movement has swept down to the south and even into the war-torn east.

A letter smuggled out of the east tells of instruction classes going on there.

Neighboring African countries are becoming interested, and inquiries have been received from Rhodesia, Rwanda, Uganda and Taiwan. Cameroon, Dahomey, Chad and Niger are making plans to start New Life for All.

It is the Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes.

WORLD VISION MAGAZINE / FEBRUARY 1968
A strange feeling came over me as I opened the bulky envelope and found once again the registration forms from the school which our children attend. For the thousandth time I wondered at the jungle of complexities surrounding the problem of educating children anywhere, especially on the mission field. If other missions are like ours, they have wrestled with the problem for years at every annual mission meeting without arriving at a consensus of opinion. When you stop to think that there are 45,000 missionaries, with at least that many children, and that these are by far the most extensively dispersed group representing any company or any cause, you begin to realize the awesome logistics of the problem. Even a cursory glance at the problem reveals all kinds of difficult alternatives. And the fact that most missionaries are probably limited to one or two of these alternatives doesn’t diminish the nagging confusion about what would be best.

Today’s answers mark the future

Even on the question of what constitutes a good academic preparation for their children, missionaries can’t agree. Academic preparation for what? For return to college in the States! For a stateside future? For life overseas? For a career that follows in their parents’ footsteps? To what extent does the choice of a school now influence the distant future of the child? And to what extent does a parent have the right to predetermine the future of his children by the choices that he makes now?

What are the alternatives open to missionary parents?

If they happen to work in an isolated pocket, they may choose a home study plan. The best known of these is the Calvert course from Baltimore, Maryland. Such home study courses help the parents to schedule the material and guide his child’s studies so as to complete the required work by the end of a year. A child studying under this type of system usually has no trouble fitting in academically in a U.S. school when he returns on furlough.

There are no exceptions. The materials for some of the grades are weak. Lack of “enrichment” studies hampers the bright child. In any case, Calvert courses do not go beyond the eighth grade, so that the child has to enroll... in some other correspondence program in order to complete high school.

High school courses range from inadequate to mediocre to academically superior. The University of Nebraska has an excellent program, with tough courses. Another program, equally well known, is so deficient that the better U.S. colleges will not accept the diploma it offers.

However, the chief problem with the home study plan is not in the academic dimension but in the failure to meet the child's social needs.

Important needs unfulfilled

One way to solve this may be to send the children to local schools. Missionaries who live in large cities may find this a very reasonable choice. Overseas, the "American" type schools often rate as high or higher than U.S. schools. Many of them, especially in the capital cities, are bilingual and bicultural, serving the children of U.S. government personnel, embassy people from serving the children of U.S. government personnel, embassy people from

Terri was sent to a Christian boarding high school in the States. But, being rather outspoken child, she has been put in her "place" repeatedly. She is bitterly resentful and complains in letters that she is looked down on as a "poor mish kid." To adjust from being "star" to being a common student is difficult enough. But being a "poor mish kid" is almost unbearable.

Tom's parents tried the missionary kids' school 200 miles away. They recognized early the necessity of social contact with other children and sent him away to the first grade. The school was a "good" one, one that "really rounded the children in the faith." Tom was very unhappy at first. He picked his thumb much longer than is normal, but gradually seemed to adjust—so much so that his parents began to worry that the school seemed more home to him than his real home. Because he was used to attending boarding schools they didn't anticipate any problems when his time came to go to the States for high school and college.

What really shook Tom was the irreverence and indifference of the other students in a "solid" Christian college in the States. While the over-secularization of the college was no doubt partly to blame for his breakdown, a potent factor may have been the super-religious ghetto in which he had been reared.

The appalling thing is that parents are not usually able to judge the effects of their choices until the teen years come and irrevocable damage may already be done. There is always the nagging but unanswerable question of what would have resulted "if." Are there any guidelines? Must each missionary experiment completely on its own? Must the same mistakes be made over and over again? Is there anything we can do to help the missionary child during a few critical years for the sake of their children?

"Is this really necessary?" some wonder. Curiously, none would deny the legitimacy of putting one's call on the shelf for a few years if a real family catastrophe occurs [such as a mental breakdown or a major illness], but to prevent such a catastrophe from occurring "just isn't trusting God"—not if you are a missionary.

Then there are the well-meaning church people who sympathize with the suffering missionary parents who have to leave their children in the States. But the parents chose their job. They anticipated hardships like this. But not many think twice about the suffering missionary child separated from parents, separated from his homeland (which is not the U.S. to him), separated from all the friends he ever knew. He has not only didn't choose the job, he often resents being chained to it through his parents. Like any teenager, he wants to be "one of the gang," but he never seems to get in.

Idolized, then isolated

At church in the States he is first idolized and then isolated. At school he is a "weirdo." He is either far ahead of his peers or below them. Rarely is he one of them. How can he be? He was in the U.S. perhaps for the first grade. Like Halley's comet he sweeps by for another year at about sixth-grade level, then again at grade 12.

The marvel is that so many missionary kids do make it. Statistics show that in desperate overcompensation they often excel. Some have become top businessmen [for instance, Henry R. Luce], some famous diplomats [Ambassadors Mean of Guatemala and Reischauer of Japan], university presidents [Dr. Goheen of Princeton], authors [Pearl Buck], outstanding teachers, doctors, ministers or what have you. It is almost like the girl in the nursery rhyme who when she was good was very, very good, but when she was bad she was horrid. Perhaps it's just that, being number two, they have to try harder.

Is Our system of educating missionary children as efficient as possible? Is there anything we can do? Is what we have now the best possible?

One way to approach the problem of educating missionary children is to set down what would be the ideal, then see how close we can come to this ideal in the face of the realities.

First of all, we want a school that as much as possible prepares the children for whatever future they choose either overseas or in the United States. We want:

1. A school with good teachers and up-to-date curriculum, related to a U.S. accrediting agency.
2. A school with half its courses taught in the languages of the country, with special courses on that country's culture and history, and a real attempt to receive credit from the foreign country as well as the U.S.
3. A student body composed of roughly one-third missionary children, one-third national children and one-third Christian U.S. children, not missionary kids, who reflect the modern U.S. teen culture. The reason for limiting national children to one-third of the student body is to maintain a basically U.S. culture inside the school since the whole surrounding environment is that of the foreign country.
4. A school that looks out for the spiritual and emotional balance of the children in a personal way, one that is cognizant of the special problems missionary children face.

To accomplish all this we would propose:

1. A special-service agency which would operate or advise schools where missionary children attend and which would employ not only education experts but child psychologists and anthropologists as well.
2. A briefing and consultation service to help the missionary child over the culture shock when he returns to the country that is foreign to him—the U.S. [Who knows how many outstanding Christian careers have been nipped in the bud by the lack of understanding counsel at a crucial point after re-entry into the U.S.]

More and more churches and people are thinking of missionary children as individuals with individual problems. As more and more government personnel go overseas today, missionaries are less and less ashamed to admit that they do not yet know how to cope very effectively with the problems they and their children face. The next ten years should be interesting as increasing attention is paid to the "greatest puzzle for the missionary parent."
Our tiny Piper Cub seemed to be at the mercy of the rising air currents almost as soon as we took off from the Missionary Aviation Fellowship base in the state of Oaxaco, Mexico. Strong winds had blown thick cushions of gleaming white clouds over the mountains. The mountain peaks looked like castle spires rising from downy beds of celestial foam.

It wasn't long before all thoughts of grandeur left me—along with my breakfast! Without warning, our pilot plunged us onto a postage-stamp-size airstrip set at a 45-degree angle on top of a bald mountain. I staggered out into the friendly smiles of 50 assorted Chinantec believers.

We had arrived at Tomato Gulch, a tiny village in southeastern Mexico 600 feet above sea level in Mexico's tropical rain forest. This Indian village interested me for two reasons. First, because a strong healthy church had sprung up here in short order after the gospel began to penetrate. Second, because the church in its infancy was battered and bruised by severe persecution. I wanted to find out what made this church strong.

Walking down from the airstrip, I asked Calvin Rensch, resident translator in this area, how his work was progressing.

Hugh Steven, with Wycliffe Bible Translators since 1956, works in Mexico as buyer for the translators working with the tribe and in public relations and photography. He has written several short articles.
"Incredible," he said. "The believers are growing stronger every day. On their own initiative, without my help or suggestion, they elected elders and chose the 'one who would make the Scriptures plain.' Some of the elders chosen were ones I would not have elected but they know their people much better than I."

have come to fix up your hearts'

Cal went on to say that a man from another sect had come through their area trying to win over the Christian believers. He told them, among other things, that they should not drink coffee or water with their tortillas. A believer from another area heard about this and walked five hours over the trail to the town of Tomato Gulch. When he arrived, he told the brethren, "I have come to fix up your hearts." He simply meant he was going to give them some proper instruction from the Word of God.

"What new things have happened since the gospel came to your people?" asked.

"Well, for one thing," Cal said, "the believers help each other as they never did before. When a house is to be built, the brethren will gather ridgepoles and also stripping to lace the poles together and help in the heavy work of digging postholes and dragging grass and palm from the hills. The believers have become deeply aware of each other's needs. This is foreign to past Chinantec culture. Before, a Chinantec could eat in front of a man who might literally be starving and never be bothered by conscience.

The Christians have also learned to sing. Before, only drunks sang.

When believers saw Cal pray and read the Scriptures with his family after breakfast they became concerned about having their own set time each day to read and pray. Some of the believers have now established a regular practice of family worship all on their own initiative.

What effects have the believers had on other members of the tribe? Cal said that in one village, 45 minutes walk from Tomato Gulch, the opposition came one night and removed the images from the local Catholic church. There were so many Christians in the village they feared the idols would not be cared for.

Believers thrown in jail

'I remember the circumstances that led up to our believers being thrown in jail,' Cal recalled.

From where we sat on the stone porch of Cal's house I could see the town jail, a stone block building with a heavy wooden lattice door that kept prisoners cramped in a six-by-nine-foot space. "I had translated the Gospel of Mark and would read and explain the Scriptures to seven fellows who came to our house every night. I knew their families and friends were pressuring them not to come, but they came anyway. The Word of God in their own Chinantec language fascinated them.

"After they decided to 'grab hold of the word' [the idiom for believing] they were threatened with expulsion from the tribe. The town elders were furious because the new Christians would not play in the band for fiestas that honored images. The fiesta season is the worst time of year for corruption of every kind, and the new Christians wanted no part of their old life. The town elders were upset because the new believers were no longer following the ways of their ancestors."

The local townspeople made the fellows use the back mountain trails. This is no small feat. The trails are almost perpendicular! When the town elders saw that the believers meant business, they made the local store off-limits. They told one that he could no longer live in his house and threatened to kill him if he continued in the new way.

When the seven men began witnessing to other Chinantecs and holding Bible studies in each other's homes, the authorities decided to act. Ironically, the elders came to Cal for help.

"We need a chain and lock for the jail door," they said.

Believers wouldn't let go of the Word

Cal, always willing to help, gave the men a padlock and chain. He didn't find out until the next morning that he had played a part in putting the believers behind bars!

The believers were kept there for three days. Passersby would taunt the fellows with “Why doesn’t your new God come down and let you out!” or “Who made you so smart to change from our tribal traditions?” When the fellows were released it was with further threats of being killed and with warnings not to continue in the new way.

“How could we do anything else but continue following God?” said John Bighorn. “The clear words of God in my own Chinantec language have shown me the road so much better.”

Another said to Cal later, “I thank God that He gave His Son who shows us the path so we can see clearly. I have now become a mature man.”

Even after their church was burned to ashes they said, “The gospel is like a cool refreshing drink of water, after I have worked all day in the cornfield. We will not turn back.”

Cal and his wife Carolyn arrived in Chinantec country 11 years ago. The Indians, not knowing what to do, gave them a community hut in which to live. The Rensches’ strange food and even stranger way of cooking made happy amusement for everyone. Cal and Carolyn worked among them good-naturedly, treating their infected insect and snake bites, dispensing pills to relieve the strength-sapping problems of hookworm and a multitude of other intestinal parasites. Through showing kindness and through their ability in learning to speak the difficult Chinantec language they were able to learn the tribal culture and thought patterns.

Beginning with a strong foundation

Sitting outside under the blinking Southern Cross, Cal listened to the men tell stories of ancient folklore, heard their fears, their dreams and hopes. Because there was communication in language and culture—because the Renches identified themselves with the Chinantecs in every way—their ultimate ministry of translating the New Testament into the Chinantec language started out on solid ground. The proof was plain to see.

One Monday night I watched from behind an overcrowded medical counter as twelve men hunched around Cal. He explained the words that were typed on sheets of bond paper. These were the Scriptures to be used in the following Sunday service. Cal told me later they simply had to “scoop” the other believers in finding out what the Scriptures were saying.

From a hill overlooking a smooth jungle stream I saw a thatched building with Indian men in sun-bleached shirts passing through a low door on one end. Soon, above the deep whisper of wind through the thick jungle trees, I heard singing. The language I did not understand, but the tune was unmistakably “Near to the Heart of God.” As I sloshed my way through the river I heard a different tune, hauntingly beautiful. “That,” said Cal, “is a song one of our Chinantec believers composed. It has become a favorite among the 11 congregations.

“There are now more than 350 believers in 11 villages,” said Cal, “and each week I am introduced to new people who have decided to ‘grab hold of the Word of God.’”

“The Chinantec church decided that they should be responsible for witnessing and reaching their own people. My job, they said, was to bring them more and more of the Word of God. The Scriptures in their own language have become meaningful to the Chinantecs. For years they have slipped and slid on the road of despair and fear. The gospel has given them a deep sense of belonging.”

They have also come to understand, through reading the Scriptures, that they have a responsibility beyond their own tribe. Six months ago they heard about a group of Indian believers in another part of Mexico who had been driven from their land and were without food and shelter. The Chinantec church collected $3.60 and sent it as an offering to help this persecuted group.

The Chinantec church is barely five years old. Yet, armed with parts of the New Testament in their own language, they have come to understand that their directive force is Christ, their basic principle is love. They have “become mature men reaching to the height of Christ’s full stature” (Eph. 4:13, TEV).
This is where we work.

Sure it's got its aches and pains. Lots of them. And we've been given a real job. “Go” said the Master. Heal its sick. Help its poor. Teach its nations. Proclaim liberty to its captive. It's real work. Care to join us?

In the light of 20 years of failure and the changes in Israel during 1967, the time has come for evangelicals to make an honest and objective reappraisal of their methods and motives for missionary work among the Jews.

It should be stated from the very beginning that I am dedicated to obeying the orders of our Lord in the great commission. Further, I do not question the sincerity of those engaged in missionary activity among the Jewish people.

However, both the mission agencies and the church need to restudy their approach to the Jews. In speaking of missions, we refer to those organizations dedicated exclusively to evangelizing the Jews. (There are churches which have had missions in Palestine for decades, but because of internal circumstances today they minister primarily to Arabs and to nationals from other lands.)

What have been the results of missionary activity among the Jews to the present?

In Jerusalem there are 21 missionary agencies including the churches. The number working in the entire nation of Israel is estimated at 72. This does not count the many individuals who may be supported from countries abroad without being registered or recognized as missionary organizations.

Yet in all of Jerusalem there are only about 220 Hebrew Christians, and 80 of these are known to be supported financially by the agencies.

Statistics are hard to uncover. Mission agencies are reluctant to provide figures but quick to provide explanations for their lack. Some claim that their converts soon leave the country. Others feel they must be kept secret because of the attitude of officials.

I asked one Hebrew Christian, himself a missionary supported from the United States, how many baptisms had come to his attention during the 30 years he had lived in the country since emigrating from Russia. "I personally
ISRAEL TODAY? by Arnold Olson

No new bona fide missionary to the Jews is permitted to enter Israel. Therefore new agencies in Europe and America desiring to establish work in Israel seek to take on a Hebrew Christian already working in Israel and a citizen of the state. One such worker is considered the official representative of five different missionary agencies in the United States, Canada and Europe. It would be interesting to study the reports to the home agencies. One convert might soon become five.

Israeli authorities, well aware of the reports going back, keep a file on each mission. Some of these reports do not inspire confidence in missionary organizations.

Counterfeit Christians

Orthodox Jews told me that some Jews are baptized as Christians in order to obtain visas to other countries plus exit visas from Israel. They cited a recent case where several families from Rumania applied for baptism to several missionary agencies. Their purpose was so obvious that even the missions refused, except for one. Such cases would provide sensational statistics in a report to supporters in America and Europe.

Prime Minister Eshkol in a report to his cabinet on March 1, 1964, revealed that a total of 200 Jews were converted to Christianity and Islam during the years 1950-64. During the same period, 407 were converted to Judaism from Christianity, Islam, the Druze and the Circassians. There are no more recent statistics as complete as these.

In the same report the prime minister revealed there were 900 Jewish children enrolled in 11 Christian schools. This kind of missionary activity is of great concern to Orthodox Jews and several attempts have been made to prohibit Jewish parents from sending their children to Christian schools.

5,000,000 foreign nationals in the USA from every country... even closed lands, are today's missionary challenge facing International Students Inc.

Today, it is possible, for the local church and the foreign and other non-Christians have across the USA by ISI missions for the local church to become work.
The main mission station, located in the heart of Washington, D. C., provides a base for training new believers among foreign nationals and missionary appointees to the ISI staff. It also serves as a conference and reception center for visitors from many nations.

So vast is the challenge of this ministry that ISI missionaries, located in strategic concentrations of foreign population, cannot possibly reach all the foreign visitors. Rather, they are bridging the gap between these visitors from overseas and missionary-minded Americans who have turned their homes into foreign mission stations.

The hub of this NEW DIMENSION IN FOREIGN MISSIONS is Washington, D. C., where the main mission station is located. Here a training base-reception center provides a place for foreign student conferences, concentrated instruction for new believers, and orientation for missionaries when they join the ISI staff.

Strategy Employed in Foreign Missions at Home

1. Befriending foreign visitors.
2. Winning them to Christ.
3. Training Christian students for national leadership.
4. Aiding returnees in evangelizing their own people.

I would like to know more about this challenging foreign missionary opportunity in the USA. Please send me a FREE copy of your booklet, "The Foreign Fields Have Come To Us."

realistic view of service overseas.

Yet there are certain facts running against the trend. One of these is the remarkable response to the Urbana missions conference sponsored by Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship during the last week of 1967. According to IVCF leaders there is a need to set the challenge of overseas service on a realistic, intellectually sound basis, not on an emotional appeal or idealistic basis alone.

Gatherings set for 1968

- February 7-21, America’s Keswick and Missionary Internship are cosponsoring three separate seminars at Keswick headquarters in Whiting, New Jersey. First is the Mission Executives Management Seminar; second is a Missionary Leadership Conference and third is a Pastors Leadership Seminar.
- April 21-23 is set as date for the Evangelical Foreign Missions Association 23rd Annual Convention, to be held in Philadelphia. Speakers include Senator Mark O. Hatfield. One subject on the agenda is “When China Opens.” The EFMA convention is held in conjunction with the annual convention of the National Association of Evangelicals.
- Summer courses (two 10-week programs) in Israel are being offered by Wheaton College. Emphasis is being placed on correlation of Scripture with the geography, history and culture of ancient Palestine through direct observation and experience.
- Summer Institute of Linguistics is to feature a special literacy seminar and workshop. The eight-week program will emphasize basic education for newly literate adults.
- September 3-6 at Winona Lake, Indiana a seminar on Church Growth will be sponsored by the Evangelical Foreign Missions Association. Dr. Donald A. McGavran, well-known leader in the church growth field, will lead the seminar.

Conservative Baptists make radical change in furlough procedure

In adopting a plan followed by the United States government regarding civilian staff members overseas the Conservative Baptist Home Mission Board made a radical change in furlough policy.

Missionaries will be allowed a one-month vacation on the field for one year of service, it was announced. The next year they will be allowed two months vacation at home with their travel expense paid by the Society.

This change was prompted by the problems that were encountered with the former one-year furlough that meant the missionaries would have to give up their overseas housing and make school changes for their children, often taking them out of school in the middle of a term. The board also expects the problem of substitutes and readjustments to be less.

This change will present deputation problems which the board plans to overcome by bringing the missionary home for periods of deputation so that he can visit his supporting churches. This may or may not coincide with the vacation period, the board reported.

M.A.P. builds new headquarters—

Medical Assistance Programs, Inc., is currently constructing a $250,000 complex—headquarters and warehouse—just north of Wheaton, Illinois, announced J. Raymond Knighton, M.A.P.’s executive director.

The facility, scheduled for completion in late spring 1968, will almost double present warehouse and office space.
A similar law was passed earlier in the central Indian state of Orissa. The Orissa bill provides penalties up to a year in prison or $1000 fine for missionaries convicted of converting minors, women or untouchables. If the attempts to win converts were by force, fraud or exploitation of poverty, the penalties could be doubled.

During discussion of the bill in the state assembly charges were made that Christian missionaries were “exploiting hunter” in parts of India to win converts.

Rebels warn churches

In northern India where tribespeople are in revolt against the New Delhi government, missionaries have been charged by the Indian government with everything from inciting the rebellions to being bad influences. Now missionaries are being pressured from the other side. Churches in the Mizo Hills region of the state of Assam have been warned by an underground, revolutionary “government” not to preach against violence and insurrection. The “Minister of Informa­tion” of the group seeking to establish an independent Mizo state announced that “The Mizo government will not tolerate any church or organization which does not accept the present government.” The warning was taken as a reply to a statement by the Presbyterian Church in the region, which recently instructed its members that the use of force by the Mizo underground was “against the gospel.”

Tribesmen burned down a Catholic school for teaching its students to sing the Indian national anthem.

The Mizos, a Mongolian hill tribe, number about 200,000 in the Mizo Hills district and almost all claim to be Christian.

He said that even the negative influence has been “favorable because it has helped the churches to find themselves and to define their own being and their duty in a revolutionary situation.”

Dr. Cepeda, pastor of the Luyane Presbyterian Church in Havana and director of the Ecumenical Study Center of the Cuban Council of Protestant Churches, gave some of the following as restrictions placed on the church:

- The loss of denominational day schools, legal regulation tending to limit church activity to church premises and church members, and indirect and direct pressure on some ministers, “mostly in small townships and by local officers.”

Dr. Cepeda went on to say that “As I, a militant Christian, understand freedom, I would dare to say that there is some lack of freedom. I would like to be granted more possibilities to criticize errors, to confront and ponder ideas, to read other philosophies and perspectives, to dialogue and dissent.”

Christian believers, he concluded, “must start by accepting the revolution as an irreversible historical fact instead of longing for the past and sighing for its reproduction in the future... We must create a theology for the Church in revolution.”

A theology for the church in revolution

The Cuban revolution is pushing the Cuban churches to define their own being in light of a revolutionary situation, stated Dr. Rafael Cepeda, a leading Cuban Protestant, in a recent interview in Britain.

He said that even the negative influence has been “favorable because it has helped the churches to find themselves and to define their own being and their duty in a revolutionary situation.”

Dr. Carl F. Henry announced January 5 that he will leave the editorship of Christianity Today, in which he has headed since its founding in 1956, to engage in theological research “at the frontiers of the current spiritual crisis.” Future plans are not well-defined, but Henry has accepted a temporary limited grant for research in the area of current theological developments.

Hal Guffey is newly elected president of International Students, Inc. He assumed the position recently vacated by Dr. Bob Finely who served as president since ISI began in 1953. Dr. Finely plans a full time speaking and evangelism ministry overseas.

Father Hugh Bishop, 60-year-old supervisor of the Anglican Community of the Resurrection, was barred “forever” from Rhodesia by the Ian Smith goverment. No official reason was given for the ban, but Father Bishop’s sermons in Salisbury Cathedral during his visit to Rhodesia in 1966 created a controversy in which some claimed he was insensitive to Rhodesia’s problems. Father Bishop is now in Britain.

The Office of the Chief of Chaplains, U.S. Air Force, has “drafted” the Rev. Donald M. Joy, executive editor of Sunday school materials for the Free Methodist Church, Dr. Findley Edge of the Southern Baptist Seminary in Louisville, Kentucky, Tom Potter, Jr. of the Methodist Publishing House in Nashville. These men are on special assignment through March 5 in England, Germany and Spain conducting workshops and giving lectures at Christian education conferences scheduled by Protestant chaplains on Air Force bases.

Mrs. Phyllis Pearce Eiler has been named executive secretary of Gospel Literature in National Tongues (GLINT). She will supervise GLINT’s international office.
“We have been twiddling our fingers,” said a missionary delegate to the second annual Missionary Seminar on Christian Education held in Illinois in early December. It was sponsored by the Scripture Press Foundation.

“Christian education must play a much larger role in the life of the national church,” he continued, “if we expect to get the job done.”

Getting the job done was the subject of four days of workshops, buzz groups, lectures and panel discussions. A total of 180 missionaries and C. E. professors from 33 countries participated. The central theme was “Mobilizing Christian Education Overseas.”

Delegates felt the single most important problem facing C. E. overseas was that few pastors and lay workers realized that Christian education is more than teaching children on Sunday mornings. Sunday school is considered by many national pastors something to be tolerated rather than appreciated and used.

The majority of the delegates felt it was basic that nationals be the ones to reach their own people. One delegate from Africa said classes lack variety, approach and methodology, have inadequate pupil involvement and poor trained teachers who in turn pass on their inefficiency.

“Christian education overseas often lacks educational know-how and spiritual vitality,” summed up Dr. R. Zuck, keynote speaker and director of the Scripture Press Foundation.

One criticism leveled at the seminar was that no national or overseas Christians were in attendance.

One delegate felt that a course in cultural anthropology might have saved years of frustration for many missionaries. American visual aids were found to be obsolete in some cultures. The delegates realized that adequate understanding of a given culture was needed.

“Much of the blame lies at our own doorstep,” the delegate said, “and an inadequate understanding of a given culture.”

In seeking to find real solutions to the problems facing them, delegates with similar problems met jointly at the close of the seminar to share suggestions. These suggestions were made into resolutions which were submitted to their mission boards which are primarily members of IFM and EFMA.
EVALUATION of the British pound continues to be a problem for millions. Most overseas activities depending on British funds get almost 15% less. Meanwhile, British belt-tightening measures bring more pressure on donations. Churches and mission agencies feel it severely. Many agencies are forced to reduce their work, or their financial aid to churches abroad. Some missionaries agree to live on less.

BRITISH COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES also feel the effects of devaluation. One Canadian source expects a 5% slowdown in Canada's economy. But this is a more indirect effect. Nothing like the impact that devaluation has in Britain itself. Yet, it could result in somewhat lighter giving to missions in Canada and in other Commonwealth countries. New Zealand, having devalued along with Britain, will take hard knocks.

OTHER RESULTS could eventually be felt. Pressures on the U.S. dollar are not likely to cause dollar devaluation, however. So many other devaluations would follow that it would have little effect. But the world's monetary system could be feeling tremors for months ahead as the dependence on dollars, pounds, gold and other monetary values sort themselves out.

THE U.S. SHARE OF MISSION RESPONSIBILITIES, at least in the economic sense, could be increased because of the recent shifts. Since Britain is able to do less, the U.S. may be expected to do more. This was the net long term effect few years ago, when Britain went through previous devaluations. Meanwhile, some European countries are increasing their contributions to Protestant mission efforts abroad. West Germany and France have been increasing their involvement. Swiss and Scandinavian mission agencies continue extensive work overseas.

EVALUATION TENDS TO KNOCK DOWN ANOTHER EFFORT. Several American missions had been exploring the possibility of setting up British subsidiaries just prior to the announcement of devaluation. Some British churchmen rejected this attempt, feeling it was an intrusion into established British mission efforts. At least they felt that the British themselves should take the initiative in setting up any new mission agencies to draw funds from Great Britain. Devaluation, of course, added to the reluctance of British churchmen and mission leaders to consider any new efforts while the existing missions are faced with the probability of sizable cutbacks.

BUT CERTAIN GOOD EFFECTS ARE POSSIBLE TOO. The sovereignty of God is not likely to be thwarted. In certain areas devaluation could be a blessing in disguise. Some established British missions have been making a deliberate effort to withdraw both finances and personnel. This forces the national churches in mission areas to take increased responsibility. But setting this policy is one thing. Putting it into practice is another. Devaluation tends to force the issue. Thus, in some situations the total cause of the Christian church may be stronger because of devaluation.

ADDITIONAL EFFECTS OF DEVALUATION included gold buying by speculators. This extra pressure on the dollar precipitated President Johnson's program to correct the U.S. balance of payments deficit. But the President's program included additional problems for missions programs, especially the limitation on travel abroad. Exact steps must be written into law by the Congress. It could take the form of a straight head tax on travel abroad, or some other form of tax. Certain categories of travel exemptions might be considered, but missionary travel is not likely to be exempted.

A typical weaver works near his jungle home in Cambodia.

Cambodia, a compact little country in the heart of the Indochina Peninsula, has a history dating back to the first century A.D. when the Indian-influenced Funan kingdom was founded. In the sixth century the Khmers overthrew the Funan empire and flourished until 1431 when they were conquered by the Thais with the aid of the Vietnamese. By the end of the 18th century Cambodia was virtually a vassal of the Thais.

To avert total dissolution of his country the Cambodian king placed it under French protection in 1863, and the French ruled until the end of World War II. A constitutional monarchy was established in 1949, with a prime minister and a national legislative assembly. Independence was proclaimed in 1953 and U.N. membership was granted in 1955. King Sihanouk abdicated the throne in 1955 and became premier. In 1960 he became chief of state.

While claiming to be neutral, Cambodia cut its economic and military ties with the United States in 1963, due to alleged intervention in internal affairs, began purchasing arms from Russia and Communist China in 1964 and broke diplomatic relations with the U.S. in 1965. Strained relations with the west have been the result. Though Sihanouk makes periodic fence-mending moves toward the west, such overtures are generally interpreted as political proficiency rather than any permanent trend toward improved relations.

The people are 85 percent Cambodians, descendents of the Khmers who flourished as a civilization in and around the city of Kambodja in the fifth century A.D. A gentle, friendly people with dark brown complexion, they use a native alphabet of Indian origin, and much of their culture reflects Hindu influence.

The rest of the population is made up of about five percent primitive mountain tribes, four percent Vietnamese, four percent Chinese, about 100,000 Cham-Malays and a few thousand Europeans.

Health is a major problem. Trained medical personnel are scarce (183 doctors, or one for 31,000 people). Life expectancy is 32 years, and half of the babies die under one year old. Dysentery, tuberculosis, yaws, malaria and trachoma are widespread.

Education is financed largely from the general national budget, with some foreign aid. Five to ten percent of the population attend primary schools and four or five out of every ten people are able to read and write. Technical, trade and special schools are on the increase, while pagoda schools are being replaced by secular ones.

Economy is mainly agricultural, organized around family-operated farms and determined by locations of the Great Lake and the Mekong River. Most important product is rice (Cambodia ranks among top ten rice producers, though only a quarter of its land is suitable for cultivation); second is rubber (virtually all is exported).

Deep virgin forests cover half the land area. Climate is tropical and humid (80 inches of rainfall a year in the lowlands), with a wet season from June to November, dry season from December to June.

Rural village homes are typical southeast Asian straw huts raised on piles.

The Great Lake and the Mekong River form a central basin. Well-watered plains, forests and mountains characterize the terrain. The south coast and northern frontiers are more mountainous.

Fishing is important in the Great Lake and along the coast. Dried fish is a basic food element.

Major towns are linked with the capital by relatively good roads and a 240-mile-long single-track railway. The Mekong River is navigable its entire length through Cambodia and through South Vietnam to the sea. Cambodia has no major natural harbors, but a new seaport has been built at Sihanoukville, eliminating the nation's former dependence on South Vietnam for trans-shipment. Several international airlines serve the country.

Religion and missions: The king is the supreme religious authority of the state religion, Hinayana Buddhism, which claims 90 percent of the population. Most Cambodians, however, are also animists. Vietnamese and Chinese practice combinations of Buddhism, Taoism, Confucianism, animism and ancestor worship. The Cham-Malays are Muslim. Some Roman Catholics are found among the Europeans and Vietnamese. Protestants are a tiny minority.

Protestant missionaries (Christian and Missionary Alliance) entered Cambodia in 1922. To keep Buddhism as the predominant religion, the king restricted missionary work to a few areas. In more than 30 years, fewer than 1000 Christians were baptized. Today there are approximately 850 baptized Christians and 14 national ministers. Half the provinces are without a Christian witness.

By refusing to renew visas, the government forced all American missionaries out by 1965. Two French couples are the only missionaries in the country today, one serving under a French organization which has a fraternal relationship with the C&MA, the other serving independently and supporting themselves through local employment.

Government restrictions limited the number of organized groups of believers, but attitudes have reportedly become more lenient in recent months and some churches have been reopened. A Bible school is in operation with 16 students and a short-term Bible school with 26 students.

As Cambodia becomes more and more involved, through various forms of Communist penetration of the South China Sea basin, its decisions will affect missionary work in that region for years to come.

The Bible was published in Cambodia in 1956, and the government has granted permission for some colportage work in one province. Two men are engaged in this work.

Far East Broadcasting Company beams 28 gospel broadcasts into Cambodia each week.

Indigenous missions and training of national workers are two of the greatest needs of the church in Cambodia.
TRAVEL TIPS

*Americans are being asked by President Johnson to curb their travel outside the Western Hemisphere for the next two years, as part of a program to bring U.S. balance of payments into a more favorable position. Special tax on travel and new limits on duty-free spending overseas are included in the proposed legislation package.

*Wives of U.S. servicemen get a 25 percent discount on air fare from the west coast to Hawaii to meet their husbands sent there from Vietnam for Rest and Rehabilitation. Pan American has requested a broadening of this plan to include wives of servicemen on R & R from Thailand.

*Even if you don't speak Japanese you can enjoy Japan's tourist spots without hiring a guide. Japan National Tourist Association announces "guide boxes" have been installed at major tourist spots. Visitor puts a Y10 coin in the slot and listens to a two-minute tape-recorded discourse in English or French.

*Americans are welcome in Cambodia, in spite of that country's break in diplomatic relations with the U.S., according to Pacific Area Travel Association. Principal attraction is Angkor and the fabulous Angkor Wat (Wat meaning temple), described as the grandest temple in existence, an astonishing and overwhelming sight reflecting the former glory of Cambodian culture which reached its height during the 10th to 14th centuries A.D.

*Every day is a holiday almost somewhere in the world. Only 64 days in the year are not commercial holidays in one of the world's 121 nations. To help you plan your overseas trips and phone calls to best advantage, the U.S. Department of Commerce provides a handy little guide, "Commercial Holidays Abroad," for 15 cents a copy. Order from Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

*On the other hand, to get the most enjoyment from your overseas trip it is good to know when special events and festivals are scheduled, such as Australia's biennial Festival of Arts March 9-23. Your travel agent can help you with this kind of information along with other details of your trip. Take advantage of his free services.

*Thailand has extended to the end of 1969 the exemption of visa requirement for American citizens holding valid passports. This means you can visit Thailand for up to 15 days without a visa.

Success in a Job He Resisted

"Emotion alone is insufficient motivation to mission. Intellectual stimulation is also essential, especially where students are involved." This is an operating assumption for Eric Fife, director of Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship's mammoth missionary conference at Urbana, Illinois during the last week of 1967.

The turnout at the triennial Urbana conference indicates there is an "enormous missionary interest among students today, but not enough action," Fife points out. The Urbana conference is designed to turn this interest into action.

Fife himself has demonstrated a special capability in attracting students to the cause of missions. Paradoxically, he resisted student work for many years, feeling that he was not cut out for it. In a sense he was forced into the job.

Born and raised in a tough area of London, England, Fife first recognized his personal need of Jesus Christ at the age of 15. The beginning of his understanding took place at a camp operated by the Boys Brigade. It involved another camper who had been caught swearing. After washing his mouth out with soap, they told the boy to make a point to become a good influence on somebody else. Fife became the boy's target. Eric's similar bad behavior brought him under conviction, although he would not have called it that at the time. Christian officers counseled and helped bring elemental Christian understanding.

During World War II, Fife served as an electrician with the Royal Air Force in North Africa. At that time he began lecturing on various subjects including current affairs. Asked how he was chosen to give these lectures, he replied jokingly, in a typically British way, "Well, I wasn't a very good electrician you see."

After his return to Britain from North Africa, he undertook one year of special study. Subsequently he became a medical missionary. Carol Bartel received her B.S. from Greenville College [Ill.] and her R.N. from West Suburban Hospital, Oak Park, Illinois. When a child she was converted and consecrated her life to the Lord. The student counselor at West Suburban, noticing her consistent Christian life, recommended her to Dr. Moffett.

While in Korea, Carol lived for several months in a Korean household where there were 13 people in three rooms. During the rest of the time she lived with two American girls, an nurse and one secretary, and also a Korean nurse. At the Children's Hospital she shared responsibility with the Korean supervisor. Together they supervised a staff of 40 Koreans in an 80-bed hospital.

From time to time she also fellowshipped with a fairly large group of American and European missionaries. This group worshipped together in the English service each Sunday afternoon in the auditorium of the Presbyterian Hospital.

Carol made several close friendships in Korea, especially with Miss Lee Chung-won, her Korean counterpart as a supervisor of nurses. Miss Lee could speak English. Carol was learning
Fife came to America as deputation secretary for the North Africa Mission. While he was working in that capacity, missionary who was embarking for Africa told him that "God is going to give you a great ministry among students."

"I won't do it!" Fife responded. At the time, he didn't think he had the academic inclination or the qualifications to fit him for student work, but those who heard his lectures were convinced that he had an almost automatic sense of rapport with the college student. Increasingly he found himself lecturing on college campuses and among Inter-Varsity groups.

Later, during the annual missionary conference at Park Street Church, Boston, Dr. Stacey Woods of IVCF approached Fife and asked him to become a missionary. So they could communicate, Lough often it was understanding without words.

Americans tend to insist on higher standards of cleanliness and patience than nationals of some cultures are accustomed to. But Carol says, "I have a theory that if I go there to work alongside them, and if I try to exhibit what I consider the best quality care, and show the greatest amount of Christian concern and love, then in the long run, I have a part in changing lives, standards and values—more than if I tried to use authority to do so."

However, Carol feels the greatest value of her short-term missionary service was to herself. She learned to think of other people in terms of their background and culture. When Korean attitudes differed from hers, she tried to understand why. Previously she had expected others to view life as she did, to share her standards and values. Now that she is back in the United States, she finds she automatically tries harder to understand why a person does or does not act in a particular way.

Short-term service on the mission field can have exceptional educational value, and Carol Bartel is one person who has the experience to prove it.

L. L. King of CoMA.

Specialist in Mission Diplomacy

The life of Louis L. King is a mixture. One day he may be grappling with administrative details in his New York office. The next he may be on his way to some out-of-the-way corner of the world to visit some of his missionary colleagues. Or again he may be lecturing to a group of mission executives, or presenting a report on overseas activities to a local congregation.

But above everything else, L. L. King is a preacher. "It is the preaching ministry that keeps me going," he says with a smile. His activities bear that out. If he is not finishing one message, he is likely preparing for the next.

King has been described by his colleagues as the “mainspring” of the Christian and Missionary Alliance overseas work. The C&MA has 861 missionaries serving on 26 fields. Since 1956 he has served as the secretary of the foreign department of that denomination. Until recently the C&MA refused to be called a denomination, on the grounds that it started as a foreign missionary agency. In course of time it did, however, become a denomination while maintaining its strong emphasis on overseas work. Its members are among the heaviest per capita givers to missions.

Louis King was brought up amid the rigors of a New Jersey farm. Although his parents were deeply religious and the church he attended was noted for its highly moral character, L. L. King’s conversion at the age of 14 took place at a holiness camp meeting.

Later, although he was confident of his standing as a Christian, he felt the need of “deeper” Christian experience. Thus he testifies that four years after his conversion he experienced sanctification.

Although King had determined to study medicine, he did not feel easy about this decision. Again, after a period of personal Bible study and prayer, he felt God’s leading toward the ministry and missionary service.

He entered Nyack Missionary College, where he graduated in 1938. In 1941 King and his wife Esther were accepted for missionary service in India. They were on route to the West Coast in preparation for sailing to India when the United States was plunged into World War II by the Pearl Harbor attack. During the war he served pastoral students are potential leaders in their own homelands. The way they are treated while studying here will have a great influence on future relations with the 150 nations from which they come.

This is more than theory to Dr. Saunders. In 1925 he was one of a group of missionaries passing through Canton China. At the railway station the were met by Communist agitators armed with clubs and guns. For hours every attempt to escape was blocked.

Finally the word of the situation reached C. C. Wu, secretary of foreign affairs in the Nationalist government. He immediately sent his bodyguard to take the missionaries to safety. Wu had previously studied in Pennsylvania and experienced the warmth of Christian hospitality while living in a Christian home. He was glad for the opportunity to provide assistance for the beleaguered missionaries.

Mrs. Saunders also plays a key role in the program of hospitality to students. General orientation to American culture is a key weakness in our international student program, she feels. Also there is a problem in establishing rapport with American students.

Pan Pacific Centers has assisted more than 1600 students to date. In one 12 month period about 800 were provided with housing, on either a short-term or long-term basis. To handle this, the Saunders have arranged for rents buildings for some students and have laced others in homes of interested Christian volunteers. They also provide counseling, employment guidance, care during illness and help when arriving or departing the country.

A few students from abroad run into major problems of adjustment. One such student tried three schools, failed in each, became emotionally upset and was hospitalized for observation. Later he doctor told Mrs. Saunders, "This young man needs love, sympathy, patience—and you can give him these better than we can." After a long, hard struggle this student received his degree and is now teaching in his home country.

The next project in the Saunders' work is a building to house international students. They are currently planning a 50-unit apartment. Most of the space will be rented to international students, but about 25 percent of the residents will be Americans, according to the plan. This will allow for the necessary international understanding and rapport.

But the Saunders' emphasize that large facilities are not necessary to the basic task. A ministry to internationals can be effective wherever Christian hospitality is available.
Can you help Jim with his problems?

Jim is in his junior year at the University of Oregon. He is wondering about the career choice he must make within the next two or three years—depending on whether he decides to take postgraduate studies or not. Education and sociology have been his major and minor respectively, and he knows he could get a job teaching in his home state of California.

But Jim is wondering about service abroad. Everything he reads these days seems to indicate that the world is in a mess. People and nations overseas need help, while most Americans seem concerned about their ability to pile up luxuries. That doesn't interest Jim much. He wants to do something meaningful, something that will help change the life of people so much less fortunate than the average American.

Being a Christian, Jim knows that the gospel could have a lot to do with changing lives. But he is not sure about becoming a "missionary" because he suspects that people of other cultures (where he might eventually be serving) may not be very open to the influence of the professional missionary. Jim wishes that somehow he could go overseas incognito, with a deep Christian purpose but not as a professional missionary.

What are the possibilities?

So far, Jim hasn't been able to get many answers to his problem. He put the question to his pastor after a young people's meeting several weeks ago. But the pastor gave him the kind of answer he expected. In fact, he didn't seem to hear the real question. He just commended Jim for his "decision" to become a missionary, and suggested that he contact a particular mission board to find out what further training would be necessary.

This question of training is another thing that bothers Jim. Most mission agencies seem to want seminary graduates or people with special Bible training. Jim hasn't chosen that route so far, mainly because formal theological education would mark him as a religious pro. That role may be all right for others. Perhaps the Church needs a certain number of professional people to keep its work going. But that's not the type of activity Jim really wants.

Full-time Christian work?

Jim also has real questions about "full-time Christian work" so-called. Jim feels that Christianity should be a full-time affair for anybody and everybody who carries the name Christian, whether or not his salary is paid by the church. Somehow it must be possible for the non-professionals to carry most of the load, more of the work Christ intended the church to do.

When he reads his New Testament, Jim is struck by the fact that Jesus did not fit into the traditional religious categories of His times. That was one of His problems. And the disciples didn't get diplomas as qualified religious professionals. Training they got. But not the label as pros. And Jim tends to feel that this very fact frees them up to communicate the gospel in a new and effective way.

So Jim is spending a lot of time thinking about his next step. He has collected some information on business opportunities abroad, but most of these involve skills or training that he has not acquired. He has been in touch with the Peace Corps. And he is currently wondering about contacts with other government agencies which work abroad.

Of course, Jim realizes that he might get a trip abroad without asking for it. He is draft age and once his student deferment is set aside he might be required to put on a uniform. At times he wonders if this might not be the best approach anyway, and he has thought about enlisting voluntarily.

What would you do, if you were Jim? Or what advice could you give him? Who would you put him in touch with? What helpful information could you send him?

If you have suggestions, or information you feel could be of help, we suggest you address it to: "Jim," c/o World Vision Readers Service, 919 West Huntington Drive, Monrovia, California 91016.
Parents Don’t Understand

Adults don’t understand teenagers. That idea may not be new, but it is a firm conclusion of an organization known as Church Youth Research, which has made an intensive study of the young people in about 500 Lutheran congregations.

What’s more, CYR has pinned down some of the most important points of misunderstanding. For one thing, adults generally believe that teenagers aren’t interested in religious matters. Adults also assume that young people today don’t have any feelings of guilt or concerns for ethical behavior.

Young people do care

On the contrary CYR says that young people usually have intense concern for these matters, accompanied by personal feelings of inadequacy and feelings of pressure at school.

Churches participating in the survey have tended to find certain blank spots in their ministry and service to young people.

As one Minnesota pastor put it, “We have been made aware of the fact that our teaching throughout the Sunday school is too much in law and good works centered, and we must emphasize telling the story of God’s love and mercy in new and compelling ways.”

As a practical result, he said, his congregation is planning to offer a course on “love and marriage,” taught by a local doctor.

Church information gap

But does the average church need to study its young people? To this question the director and his staff respond with another question: “How do you reach teenagers if you don’t understand them?”

CYR is based in Minneapolis, Minnesota and is directed by the Rev. Dr. Merton P. Strommen, a research psychologist and minister who also serves as research director of the Religious Education Association. Although it began as a service to Lutheran churches, CYR has recently branched out to serve other denominations and is attempting to become self-supporting.

In addition to basic research on young people and what they are thinking, CYR offers several other services. It is currently conducting a series of seminars in various parts of the nation aimed at people who want to understand and work with young people. It has published several books on topics relating to God, sex, “do-it-yourself” religion, “parents as people,” personal moods and marriage.

The surveys which CYR conducts are analyzed by computers. It took the organization four years to develop the library of descriptive sentences which were necessary to arrive at the profile youth groups. The charge to a church for an analysis of a group of 50 young people runs around $125.

A Battle Worth Winning

Go is the royal command to a royal priesthood. Unless we go forth in the name of Jesus Christ we can never achieve anything for Him. Others will not come to Christ if we stay put.

Going forth requires action, action which is reaction to what Christ has done for us. The results of going forth will be weeping and rejoicing, for rejoicing is always preceded by weeping.

The expanded activities of EMIS got encouragement from an ad hoc meeting of mission leaders at Colorado Springs early in 1967. It then got backing from the National Liberty Foundation of Valley Forge, Pennsylvania. A proposal, prepared by the Rev. Osborne Buchanan, Jr., is currently under consideration along with means of implementation.

This recognition of the need for research reflects an increasing tendency to turn to associations such as IFMA and EFMA for information and counsel in mission policy and procedures. The IFMA acts as an information center on such matters, but staff limitations make it impossible to carry on extensive detailed research. Much the same is true of EFMA.

Meanwhile the IFMA publishes its own IFMA News five times a year, in addition to bringing member missions up to date on each other's activities. This publication includes summaries of statistical data supplied by the member agencies. Included are the number of missionaries and home staff serving under each of the member missions along with a summary of the total income of each agency.

Looking to the future, Jack Frizen sees an even greater place for IFM services. To this end, the IFMA recently launched a special drive to obtain $50,000 for consolidation and enlargement of the work. But this is still within IFMA's determination to concentrate on missionary output on the field. As Frizen puts it: "Every given talent of our 8000 IFMA-relate missionaries needs to be activated and utilized creatively to accomplish God's purposes in world evangelization and church development."

And we'll send Gospels on to the millions of Spain who have no missionaries and no Bibles, but are shaking off centuries of darkness, and asking for the Light.

JUST GIVE US THE WORD

A Spanish evangelical minister told PTL that there are 3 million people in his province, but only 5,000 evangelicals. He asked for 1 million Gospels of John for Spain. What shall we do? Shall we give them the Word? We are waiting to hear from you!

World-renowned anthropologist Dr. Marguerite Mood was here at the university the other day to deliver one of her famous lectures.

On this occasion her subject was "Progress and the Banishment of Superstition." As her prime illustration she referred to progress in the United States as being largely due to the ability of Americans to throw off centuries of pagan and medieval superstition. This allowed the necessary freedom to test new ideas, experiment with new systems, and do things in new ways.

Some interesting points came up in the question period that followed. For instance, one fellow asked about the observances of Groundhog Day on February 2.

"That's one of those delightful leftovers," Dr. Mood said, "but nobody takes it seriously any more."

"But how do you account for the fact that the stores sell more fur coats if the sun is shining so that the groundhog can see his shadow?" the student asked. Dr. Mood looked a bit perplexed and mumbled that the figures would have to be studied more carefully.

Sports superstitions came up too, especially the idea that uniforms should not be washed after a win or else it would result in a subsequent loss. Somebody added the fact that the university's basketball coach would not allow his players to launder their uniforms after any winning game.

To this Dr. Mood replied in clinical language that statistical studies prove that basketball players who do not launder their uniforms are never guarded as closely as those who do.

"Are you trying to say that our basketball team stinks?" someone blurted out from the crowd.

After that the discussion turned to religion. A student in the front row said he understood that certain Christian practices, including some elements of Christmas and Easter observances are derived from pagan rites and practices.

"That's right. We call these practices 'survival,'" Dr. Mood declared. Certain practices which were once magical are held over in modern religions. But the significant thing is the meaning they carry today, not what they came from. You cannot say that modern religion is pagan because of these survivals of ancient ideas."

"Religion itself is a survival," another sociology major declared.

Dr. Mood shifted her weight to the other foot, drew in a breath and adjusted the microphone. Then after another pause for deep thought, as if to select exactly the right words, she said, "I don't think modern society is yet ready to dispense with all religion."

"When will it be ready?" came the question from the audience.

At just that moment a crashing sonic boom hit the lecture hall. Nerves tensed and the students sat forward in their seats. Several of the girls gasped and one of them gave out with a low scream.

Dr. Mood herself was a bit shaken by these developments. "Now don't be superstitious about these unpredictable little events," she said. "None of them have hurt us yet." But some of the students up front were quite sure they heard her add under breath "...knock on wood" as she rapped the lectern lightly, to signal that the lecture was over.

Dr. Stonewall Hurdler.
Further, they object to the deceitful methods employed by some. For example, a man, realizing he would be denied entrance to the country as a missionary, might apply as a student, newspaper reporter, writer, researcher, etc., and once in the country concentrate on evangelism. I met a man who had just come from the States. He claimed to be a writer for the newspaper in his home town and said he planned to write some reports on his observations. Later I found he was an ordained minister and had been a pastor for many years. He was receiving support from churches back home and after finding a place to live would be sending for his wife. This kind of subterfuge is soon known to the authorities, and it only makes legitimate missionary work more difficult.

Two new agencies have been accepted as missionary organizations. Both had to sign affidavits that they would confine their efforts to Arabs and other non-Jews. Such ministries are needed, but submitting to such an agreement raises two intriguing questions. First, are the supporters at home needed, but submitting to such an agreement raises two intriguing questions. First, are the supporters at home well aware of missions to the Jews may provide a clue as to why such missionary efforts, by human standards and available statistics, seem to be failing.

Israel not opposed to all missions

One should not conclude that Israel is opposed to all missionary efforts. Some missionary groups are doing a commendable work in such areas as medicine, education, orphanages and research. This is appreciated and respected. For example, the mission hospital in Nazareth, which serves Arabs, is outstanding. The agricultural and industrial training school and farm operated by the Southern Baptists near Tel Aviv can stand beside any comparable school in the United States. There is an orphanage in Haifa. However, few are reached in these.

A look at the methods and theology of missions to the Jews may provide a clue as to why such missionary efforts, by human standards and available statistics, seem to be failing.

Missions to the Jews in most instances hold to the philosophy that (i) there is a special gospel for the Jews, (ii) it takes a special type of missionary to present this special message to the Jewish people, (iii) before and following their conversion, the Jews must be treated as a special class of people, and (iv) financial support for work among the Jews must take priority over all other missionary giving.

Are the Jews interested in the Messiah?

The burden of the message to the Jews, as they see it, is to prove to the Jew through the preaching of the Old Testament that Jesus is the Messiah. Invariably, these hold to an extreme dispensational view of the Scriptures and place their major emphasis on the prophetic aspects of the Bible. This is hereby observed as a fact, not as a criticism of the theology. This approach, however, is resented by the Jews and lacks scriptural support.

The Jews are no more interested in Jesus as the Messiah now than they were 2000 years ago. Some are looking for a Messiah, to be sure, and an even larger number are looking for the messianic era. But their concept of a coming deliverer is based on their own thorough study of their own Scriptures.

Is the evangelistic thrust of the church ever to be based on the Old Testament alone? Are we to convince mankind from the Old Testament that Jesus is the Messiah, or from the New Testament that Jesus is the Savior? Where in the Word are we told to preach the Messiah as the Redeemer? True, the very name Christ means the Anointed One, the New Testament expression for the Messiah. But salvation is promised through confessing Him as Lord and Savior, not as the Messiah to the Jewish nation.

We do believe the day will come when Israel shall see him, believe in him, accept him and engage in a great missionary program to tell this message to the world. But the challenge to the church in our day is to go and teach all nations and to baptize them, not in the name of the Messiah, but in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Our gospel is not that Jesus is the coming Messiah but that “Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures” (I Cor. 15:3, 4).

Many missions to the Jews believe it requires a special kind of evangelist, preferably a converted Jew, to reach Jews. When the disciples were ordered to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, Christ did not divide his forces. He did not designate some to work among the Jews and others to work among the Gentiles.

Special missions to the Jews seem to hold that the Jew, even in the time of grace, is a special class to be dealt with in a special way. Not even the churches seem ready to absorb these converts. They must be segregated in evangelical ghettos before and after conversion.

Phileo-Semitism resented

An official of the Ministry of Religious Affairs in Jerusalem told me bluntly, “We Jews resent phileo-Semitism as much as we resent anti-Semitism.” Emphasis on a “special love for the Jews because they are God’s chosen people” smacks of hypocrisy. Jews resent this, especially when we confine them to special missions in our cities while we are a part of beautiful churches and fine congregations.

During this age “there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved” [Rom. 10:12-13]. Jew and Gentile are equally in need of a Savior, “... for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are under sin; as it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one” [Rom. 3:9-10].

There are not two separate churches or congregations, one for the Jews and another for Gentiles. There are not even separate churches for Jews and Arabs! “For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us ... that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby” [Eph. 2:14-16].

Does the Jew have priority?

Many missions to the Jews contend that priority should be given to work among the Jews in both financial support and witnessing. “To the Jew first is somewhat of a motto among them, based on the statement of Paul, “For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek,”[Rom. 1:16].

Taken out of context it becomes a good slogan for raising funds. But the gospel has long since been given to the Jew first. The disciples carried out that part of their commission. Paul did the same before turning to the Gentiles.

Recent events in Israel have strengthened the interest and faith of evangelicals in the Holy Bible. It is to be hoped that it will also bring a new interest in the Bible method and urgency of evangelism.

Conferences on the subject of the place of the Jew in prophecy have not produced the desired results. Nor have promotional campaigns to raise funds for special missionary efforts among the Jews been successful.

Forcing Christianity on others

Dr. Young, quoted earlier, says, “Tragically, some Christians will not support anything unless it is a direct effort to force Christianity upon others. They say the restoration of the Jewish people to Palestine could be for Jews a good thing. But they would feel it worthy of support unless Christians could use the support as a means of the direct conversion of Jews to Christianity. The Bible, on the other hand, indicates that those who go back to their land go in unbelief and will only at the 'fulness of the Gentiles' turn to their God. The going back is important, too.”

I discovered a wholesome respect in the part of government officials, businessmen and scholars for evangelicals. They sense a common belief in the Christian Testament.

I asked a leading Jewish scholar in the field of the history of Christianity, especially of the Eastern Church, what he might consider the best way for an evangelical Christian to communicate his faith to a Jew and for the Jew to communicate to the Christian. He replied with one word: osmosis.

I went to the dictionary to see if the word had a meaning I had missed. I found it to be the “tendency or process by which a fluid passes through a membrane into a solution where its condition is lower, thus equalizing conditions on either side of the membrane ... the diffusion of fluids through a porous partition.”

What did the devout Jewish scholar mean? Did he imply that the wall between the Jew and the Christian is porous? Did he mean that we should listen as well as witness? Did he mean there is a place where Jew and Gentile can meet? The answer is as close as the nearest Bible.
I Can't Forget...

by Norah Streight,
The Evangelical Alliance Mission, Arabia

Mrs. Streight with Keith and Kathryn just before they left for school the first time, four years ago.

"But he doesn't know what it's like being away," she reminded me.

Yet this same daughter, once settled back at school in India, could write, "I know that it is God's will for us to be here at school while you and Daddy work for Him in Arabia."

"Two more weeks before the children will be home for Christmas vacation," my husband said longingly one evening. "How can we possibly wait that long?"

When I reminded him that the two weeks they would be with us would seem like no time at all he thought comparison unfair.

The long-awaited day of homecoming arrived. As I gave Keith a good-night kiss that first night the question forced itself from his lips, "How many days before we have to leave?"

Why should we send our children from us and twice a year go through this sorrow of parting which is only partly relieved by the poignant joy of reunion? Why not keep them with us and teach them on our station? This is a question I have often faced in thinking through our responsibilities to the children God has entrusted to our care.

The answer lies in the fact that they are indeed a trust from God for the years from childhood to maturity. Then they must live their own lives of usefulness for their Lord. If by keeping them with us on an isolated mission station we deprive them of the best that is available in education, we are failing them.

During furlough I overheard our two discussing their boarding school. Their conclusion was that the only thing it needed to make it perfect was to have Mommy and Daddy there. Listening, I knew that our God and theirs had been faithful in looking after their care and development while they were far from us.

Well Said, Mr. Editor!

Our Sunday Visitor is a family-type paper that for a long time has stood as a popular symbol of Romanatholicism, particularly as it relates to the American experience. Ten years ago a special edition of the Visitor appeared weekly under the title Operation Understanding. In mood and manner it was a forewarning of that wider outlook and more fraternal spirit which we Protestants have come to associate with Vatican II in its best qualities.

Thanks to someone's generosity, I have receivedOperation Understanding almost from its beginning. Its editor, Dale Francis, has a journalist's easy, conversational style of writing. He knows how to "win friends and influence people." This technique can be enjoyed cheaply or nobly. I have come to believe Dale Francis is on the side of the nobles. Because his tenth anniversary editorial, concerning such popular but misunderstood issues as "Christian unity" and "ecumenism" contains more sense than most Protestant writings on these matters, I want to quote from it:

Now one thing I've always said is that we have a great many false barriers that can be torn down by understanding each other. That's a fact. Catholics have misunderstandings about Protestants, Protestants have misunderstandings about Catholics. These we can by communication eliminate. So we talk with one another, try to understand one another, love one another, appreciate one another. That's good and that's necessary, but we don't hide from ourselves the fact that there are real barriers to Christian unity, we face up to them.

And the way to do it is by loyalty to our own commitments and by love and respect for one another. So how can we help move towards Christian unity? Well, I've always maintained that when Christian unity comes—its inevitability is going to be the work of the Holy Spirit and not of man. Man can create the atmosphere of love and respect in which the Holy Spirit will act but it will be the work of the Holy Spirit. But man's role in providing the atmosphere is of greatest importance.

Here are insights worth noting. We ignore them at our peril. First, we should be concerned about unity. Overseas and "at home," both among mission agencies and churches, this should be evident. Secondly, we should feel responsible for creating a climate that is conducive to unity. And, thirdly, realizing that divergent convictions do in fact set up barriers to unity, we should rely upon the Holy Spirit to condition us for that vision of "the truth as it is in Jesus" in which our consenting minds can draw us confessionally together.

In this way we shall be saved from the folly of trying, in Dale Francis' phrase, to "good fellow" our way to Christian unity.

Well said, Mr. Editor! That's World Vision Magazine's salute to Operation Understanding.

Christian Infiltrators

A year ago the government of Egypt was advertising technical and professional assistants in certain of its departments. It was willing to take them from abroad. The general secretary of the CMS, the Rev. John Tayler, commented:

We certainly believe that our Society is called today to offer the largely invisible and inward links of its supportive fellowship to just such people as that writer has in mind, and that, in our parlance, "CMS missionaries" should embrace on equal terms those who seek appointment under governments or universities overseas as well as those who serve in some Church appointment, provided only their desire to uplift Jesus Christ before men is paramount.

Add to this the fact that earlier in 1966 President Nasser of Egypt had told the Egyptian people that their national unity and well-being demanded "unselfish humanings," people of "efficiency, capacity, and character." No one needs to remind me that Mr. Nasser, in the eyes of some people, could do with more of these qualities himself. Nevertheless, Nasser, like Indira Gandhi of India and President Marcos of the Philippines, is threatened by a cancerously spreading inefficiency and corruption in government. He at least discerns what sort of persons are required to save the day.

Here then—in Africa, Asia, and Latin America—are places where the unconventional missionary has an opening. Not a big opening, nor a frequent one, but an opening just the same.

Have we Christian infiltrators who are prepared to move in? When it comes to the forms of Christian witness, new ground must be broken, new entries made, new chances taken.

Too long have Christians in African and Asian countries given the impression that they are an island of piety, scarcely washed by the seas of the nation's surrounding life and action. Foreignness can never be completely disclaimed by the expatriates from Europe and North America, but something can be done to lift this stigma from the Christian community in mission lands. Perhaps infiltration in the spheres of business and government is one way of doing it. It's worth considering!

PSR
EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE

The Far East’s Most ‘Christian’ Nation

Manila, Philippines

It’s a rough time to be in this young and yeasty republic. For one thing, it’s near the end of the typhoon season, and this year the end is worse than the beginning. Two vicious storms, two weeks apart, have devastated property, paralyzed communications, blocked highways with mudslides, brought air traffic to a halt and left a trail of injuries and death. More than 300 Christian leaders, intent on getting to our pastors’ conference on the island of Luzon, never arrived. Those who were not prevented from starting were left stranded on the way. Still, about 700 got through.

For another thing, it’s the year of the national elections (though not for the president). Filipinos — and here goes one of those dangerous generalizations— have a built-in aversion to dull political campaigns. They orate, gyrate and assassinate. It gives you a shudder to read the newspapers. The shootings they report convince you that these people take their politics with deadly seriousness. Yet it would be unfair to imply that the overwhelming majority of the people are not peaceable, responsible citizens.

The Cleaning Out of Grafters

What is a somber threat is the persistent and widespread graft that eats into government revenues and mars the image of officialdom. President Marcos — whose party has come through the election with a creditable showing — insists that the fight for cleaner government will never slacken so long as he is in power.

Religiously, the Philippines have the distinction of being the Christian nation of Asia. The new international airport at Mactan, Cebu, is close to the spot where Ferdinand Magellan, in 1521, made his famous landing to claim for the Spanish Crown and the glory spread graft that eats into government revenues and the alliance of traditional Catholicism but with an openness to evangelical influence that Rome had not exhibited until Pope John XXIII came along.

Far and away the largest community of Protestants is to be found in the “United Church of Christ.” It is approaching the one million membership mark. Of its bishops, Onofre Fonceca, has been serving as chairman of the National Committee for Pastors’ Conferences. His humble, fraternal spirit has been a benediction to the Luzon conference where, as the Brits would say, he was “in the chair.” Four years ago Bishop Fonceca gave strong leadership to a forward move in evangelism in which each member of the Unit Church was challenged “to win at least one Filipino Christ.” The goal, alas, was far from reached, but the striving was worth the effort if only to underline the sober fact that too many members had too little communication.

This reminds me that the other day, in our conference with the pastors of the far south, Dr. Jose Yap told of a student of his who, on being asked why he was getting poor grades, replied: “My major is eating and my minor is sleeping!” Too many church members, said Dr. Yap, are afflicted with the same trouble: a lack of intake and languor, no output and drive.

The Sorting Out of the Flocks

Tribute must be paid to the expressions of Protestant life found in other groups at work among these 700 islands: Methodists, Lutherans, Baptists, Pilgrim Holiness, Assemblies of God, Foursquare, Far Eastern Gospel Crusade, Overseas Missionary Fellowship, Philippine Crusades (whose Basil Costerisan has rendered yeoman’s service as the “coordinator” of the three pastors’ conferences in which we have participated), together with such agencies as Wycliffe Bible Translators and the Far East Broadcasting Company. Some are affiliated with the Philippines Council of Churches; some are not. Among the latter, attempts have been made to get going with a really vital and vigorous agency. The Walking Out of Grafters

What is a somber threat is the persistent and widespread graft that eats into government revenues and mars the image of officialdom.
